FIGHTING INFLATION

Utilities Fighting Rising Oil Costs

A number of electrical supply companies have found what they hope will be a useful alternative to scarce and expensive fossil fuels.

They're hoping to be able soon to turn to plutonium—a nuclear fuel created in current Light Water Reactors and in future Liquid Metal Fast Breeder Reactors.

Last year, about 30 percent of our electricity came from burning oil and gas. With costs of imports rising and domestic production declining, we must eliminate the use of these precious materials for applications that can be satisfied by other means. We must conserve our oil and gas for other important uses such as petrochemicals, plastics, fertilizers, textiles and aviation fuel.

Combined with coal, nuclear power can meet our electrical needs for centuries to come, but only with the Liquid Metal Fast Breeder Reactor. This type of reactor not only produces electricity, it also produces plutonium fuel—more in fact than it uses up. It is now up to Congress and the Administration how soon we get the benefits of these reactors through development of a demonstration plant. If there is excessive delay, it may be decades before we can build commercial plants of this type and by then we may be short of the precious uranium now used to fuel our reactors.

If demonstration is completed soon, however, it could lead the way to commercial-sized plants that generate electricity and sufficient nuclear fuel to last us for centuries, thus conserving our precious fossil resources for other purposes.

With swift completion of these power plants, our utility companies may someday be able to provide us with all the electricity we need at lower costs than might otherwise be achieved.

According to a law once on the books in Birmingham, Ala., it's illegal to drive a car while blindfolded.

A NEW SOURCE OF POWER can help keep electricity costs down.
